

Soil Structure

Maintaining good soil structure is important to plant growth and the success of our operation. We have adopted procedures that help to minimize the impact of agriculture on soil structure and reduce the possibility of soil erosion. Some of the techniques include:

- Not driving on water saturated soil
- Chipping, pruning in the field and returning them to the rows
- Maintaining cover crops between rows
- Tilling tree rows to reduce the reliance on herbicides
- Not overwatering

INSTRUCTION

Add or remove items from the above list to match your practices.